

Distribution, Intensity of Population and Structural Changes of Family in District of Lushnja after 1990 (As o Human Resource)

Jostina Dhimitri^{1*}, Albina Sinan²

¹*University of Tirana, Tirana, Albania;* ²*University "Eqrem Çabej" Gjirokastra, Albania*

Accepted November 12, 2012

Abstract: Lushnja district is an administrative regional unit with historically and dynamic geographically developments. In this regard the population as human resource has a special place in these developments because it is a key component in targeting future by being the first to invest in strategic key: population-environment-development. Therefore, this paper carries value. Interest on statistics of the number of population and other demographic indicators are necessary and important for economic, demographic, social development. In view of demographic, knowledge of the population, the identification and explanation of its evolution in time and space, represents not only the importance to recognize, understand and follow the flow of real processes on demographic data (such as natural movement, mechanical, etc.), but also to give more comprehensive changes that have occurred in structures of age groups, gender, social - professional features of urbanization, mechanical distribution of population and labor resources, changes in qualitative structure of family etc. Population in Lushnja district resulted in growing, as a result its impacts in community and environment search to be in focus in political, social, economic and environmental planning. The utilizing technology of GIS helped in evidences of the addressed problems.

Keywords: Lushnja district, geographic position, population density, family structure

* Corresponding: E-Mail: jostinak@yahoo.com;

#This paper has been presented at IC-2012, Shkoder, Albania